

Why take a program that's accredited by the Canadian Supply Chain Sector Council?

If you are looking at your options for education or training in the supply chain field, you would do well to consider a course or program that has been accredited by the Canadian Supply Chain Sector Council. These offerings meet the CSCSC's national standard, written in partnership with the Canadian Standards Association (CSA Standards) with significant input from supply chain stakeholders across Canada.

While offerings accredited through the CSCSC's National Accreditation Program may not be superior to others that are not accredited, they are proven. That should give you confidence in selecting an accredited program or course from among the many supply chain-related offerings in the marketplace.

Accreditation is also a signal to employers that you've learned from a recognized, reputable provider and that your education or training is relevant to industry's needs. By promoting your completion of an accredited offering, you give employers a means to evaluate your preparedness for the jobs they offer.

Information about the National Accreditation Program is available at www.supplychaincanada.org/en/NAP.

